Superfund/Technical

REFERENCE: RLJ Memos dated September 22, 30 and October 16, 1987

A site drive-by on October 23, 1987 found the Monsanto contractor still placing the clay cap at the Krummrich Drum site. Apparently the field crew was still experiencing difficulty in achieving proper soil moisture prior to compaction.

By October 27, 1987 the contractor could begin preparation for installation of geotextiles, and by October 28, 1987 geotextile installation was well underway (Photos 758 - 7A & 8A). Steady construction progress was made once the soil compaction aspect of the project had been completed. The cap was essentially finished by November 5, 1987 including the vegetation mat (Photos 758 - 16A & 17A). There were a dozen supervisory-type personnel on-site that date, although the principle contractor (Geo-Con) had already demobilized. Several workmen were northeast of the site utilizing a small backhoe. Similiar on-site activity was observed on November 9, 1987 (Photos 758 - 22A, 23A, & 24A) and is speculated to be associated with the rerouting of the railroad siding.
